

"The available data indicate that mercury is present all over the globe (especially in fish) in concentrations that adversely affect human beings and wildlife."

—UNEP Global Mercury Assessment 2002

Will the treaty reduce global mercury releases to protect the next generation, and the communities dependant on fish for survival?

Or will a mercury treaty actually legitimize continued use, exposure and releases of mercury, to protect short-term economic interests?